Dear Secretary General Ki-Moon:

The Association of the Bar of the City of New York (“Association”) has for several years been on record as supporting the expansion of the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) to monitor or report on human rights violations both in the territory of Western Sahara occupied by Morocco and the refugee camps at Tindouf governed by the Polisario.

On the occasion of the renewal of the mandate of MINURSO in 2010, the President of the Association sent the attached letter to the United Nations Secretary-General, with copies to United Nations officials, the members of the United Nations Security Council, and officials of the United States government, urging that MINURSO’s mandate be expanded to include such monitoring. We did so because of the reports of human rights abuses cited by reputable sources such as Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International, the RFK Center for Human Rights, and the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, and because we believed that only the reporting of a reputable neutral party with a daily presence in these locations would be able to provide the United Nations and the international community information that was complete and credible. We also noted that reporting on such issues is standard practice in United Nations peacekeeping missions and that there is no justification for eliminating this function from MINURSO’s mandate.

The Association continues to urge, for the reasons articulated in our attached 2010 letter, that the United Nations Secretary-General and members of the United Nations Security Council expand MINURSO's mandate to include monitoring and reporting of human rights violations.

Very truly yours,

Carey R. Dunne

H.E. Ban Ki-moon
United Nations Secretary General
Executive Office of the Secretary General
United Nations Headquarters

New York, New York

Dear Secretary General Ki-Moon:

I write to you on behalf of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York to urge the United Nations Security Council to include in the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) a requirement to monitor and report on human rights violations when the Security Council considers the renewal of MINURSO's mandate next month.

The Association is an independent non-governmental organization with more than 23,000 members in over 50 countries. Founded in 1870, the Association has a long history of dedication to human rights and the adoption of policies to implement the United Nations Charter, notably through its United Nations and International Human Rights Committees. It also regularly follows developments in Africa through its Committee on African Affairs. All three of these committees have identified this situation as warranting concern.

MINURSO was established in 1991 as a peacekeeping mission charged with monitoring the ceasefire agreement which ended over fifteen years of armed conflict between Morocco and the Polisario over the territory of Western Sahara, and conducting a referendum whereby the people of Western Sahara could determine their future. Throughout the 19 years since the establishment of MINURSO there have been consistent reports of human rights violations in the territory controlled by Morocco, including the arrest, torture and detention of Sahrawis for peacefully advocating self-determination.¹ There have also been allegations of abuses in the refugee camps controlled by the Polisario in Tindouf, including restraints on travel and free speech.² In its 2006 Country Report on Human Rights Practices in Western Sahara, the ² The claim of the Moroccan government that the Polisario has detained 45,000 to 50,000 Sahrawi refugees against their will has been reported in the 2006 Country Report on Western Sahara prepared by the U.S. State Department's Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor.

United States Department of State acknowledged a number of allegations of human rights abuses in the territory as well as the fact that “[t]he Moroccan government restricted freedom of expression, assembly and association.”³ In 2006 a mission of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights also issued a report in which it concluded that “[o]verall, the human rights situation is of serious concern, particularly in the Moroccan-administered territory of Western Sahara” and identified a range of human rights abuses that included denial of the rights of the Sahrawis “to express their views about the issue [of self determination], to create associations defending their right to self determination and to hold assemblies to make their views known.”⁴

Despite these reports of human rights abuses occurring in the region, MINURSO personnel have been unable to take steps to monitor and report on their existence, because their mandate contains no provisions relating to human rights.⁵ This is particularly unfortunate because the United Nations Department of Peacekeeping Operations considers international human rights law to be “an integral part of the normative framework for United Nations peacekeeping operations.”⁶ Consistent with this view, the majority of UN peacekeeping missions currently in operation have been given a role in monitoring human rights conditions (and, in many cases, acting to protect the victims of such abuses). Indeed, as best we can tell, all of those missions initiated within the past decade have included such provisions,⁷ including the UN Mission in Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT), the UN Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS), the UN Operation in Code d’Ivoire (UNOCI), and the UN Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), each of which has specific provisions allowing for the promotion, protection, investigation, and/or monitoring of human rights.⁸

The Association has not conducted an independent investigation of the existence of human rights abuses in Western Sahara or in the Polisario camps. Accordingly, we take no position on the existence of or the parties responsible for any such violations. Similarly, we take no position on the issue of independence for the Western Sahara region. However, we believe that the consistent and serious allegations by reputable human rights organizations, as well as by the United Nations itself, warrant attention and concern. We also believe that it is well within the prerogatives of the United Nations Security Council to authorize United Nations personnel under its supervision to provide it with an assessment of human rights abuses within the territories and states where they operate.⁹ We believe that an expansion of MINURSO's mandate to do so is both warranted by the circumstances, and conducive to achieving the aims of the Charter and a just and lasting solution to this conflict.

⁶ The “United Nations Peacekeeping Operations: Principles and Guidelines (2008)” published by the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations, Department of Field Support, p. 14. The Guidelines go on to state: “United Nations peacekeeping operations should . . . seek to advance human rights through the implementation of their mandates.” (p. 14) and “All United Nations entities have a responsibility to ensure that human rights are promoted and protected by and within their field of operation. Most United Nations multi-dimensional peacekeeping operations are therefore mandated to promote and protect human rights by monitoring and helping to investigate human rights violations and/or developing the capacity of national actors and institutions to do so on their own.” (p. 27).

We call upon you to take appropriate measures to ensure that if and when MINURSO's mandate is extended next month, it includes the directive to monitor and report on human rights violations both in the territory of Western Sahara and in the refugee camps in Tindouf.

Very truly yours,

Patricia M. Hynes

⁹ We note that quite apart from any specific powers conferred upon the United Nations Security Council under Chapters 6 and 7 of the United Nations Charter, the Security Council, under its general mandate under the Charter to maintain international peace and security, enjoys the implicit power to authorize fact finding missions to report to it on a wide variety of issues. Authorizing MINURSO personnel located in the territory of Western Sahara and the Polisario controlled areas of Algeria to report on human rights abuses within these areas would be well within the scope of powers conferred on such missions. We also suggest that such authorization is implicit in the power of the Security Council to establish peacekeeping operations under both Chapters 6 and 7 of the Charter, and in the ceasefire agreement of Morocco and the Polisario under whose authority MINURSO was established. With regard to the ceasefire agreement, we note that in paragraph 20 of the Report of the Secretary General S/21360 (June 18, 1990) in which he outlined the terms of the Settlement Agreement between the parties, the Secretary General referred to the deployment of a group of UN observers, the function of which would conform to "the principles generally applicable to UN peacekeeping operations," and that in paragraph 56 of his report s/22464 (April 19, 1991) he indicated that he would keep the Security Council informed of "all matters that might affect the nature of the mission or its continued effectiveness."
